Dear ,

Thank you for your mail.

The Wikimedia Foundation is merely a hosting provider. It has no editorial committee and no staff or volunteers to undertake enquiries on the contents of articles.

We suggest you put your remarks on the discussion page associated with the article and prepend {{NPOV}} on top of the article, to signal the article is not neutral.

Wikipedia is a collaborative encyclopedia (as explained at <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:Introduction>), and so anyone may edit its articles. Its policy, nonetheless, is that articles must be written from a Neutral Point of View, representing all majority and significant-minority views fairly and without bias, as is discussed extensively at <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/WP:NPOV>.

However, since article content is not controlled by a central authority, we do not resolve editing disputes via email. Instead, please follow the steps outlined at <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:Dispute_resolution>. These steps are designed to help you work with other editors and to draw upon the help of the wider community.

Thank you for your contributions to Wikipedia.

Yours sincerely,
David Monniaux
